KEYNOTE SPEAKER & FACILITATOR TAKING TEAMS FROM LOW VOLTAGE TO HIGH VOLTAGE

Jeremiah has spent over 20 years leading mission critical programs across nuclear, aerospace manufacturing, and national defense, delivering more than $1 billion in complex project execution. He is the creator of the High Voltage Execution System and author of the forthcoming book High Voltage Execution: The Art of Influence, The Science of Execution.

Today he works with organizations building leaders who deliver the projects our communities, businesses, and world depend; ensuring progress is repeatable instead of occasional. In a world where AI accelerates how quickly decisions have to be made, one thing has not changed; people still have to make the call. That is why strong leadership and sound judgment matter more now than ever.

His audiences do not just leave inspired. They leave knowing what to do, why they are doing it, who they are doing it for, and how they are going to accomplish it.

1 The Art of Influence, The Science of Execution

THE START OF LEADERSHIP | MOST REQUESTED

Lead at the level the work demands.

Everything changed, but what did not change is how your people work. They are not underperforming. They are performing perfectly at a level the business outgrew. This keynote gives them a system for the new level the business demands now.

Leaders leave able to:

- Locate themselves in the Four Levels of Leadership; identify what the work now requires so they can rise to the next level of leadership.
- Build execution rhythm where progress is repeatable instead of occasional, so the company stops paying twice for the same initiative.
- Regulate how they show up in high stakes moments so change moves through the team instead of stalling it.

For: Senior leaders, executive teams, project managers, and organizations whose work has changed faster than their habits.

THE START OF LEADERSHIP

Influence takes months to build and minutes to be needed.

The relationships that determine whether your work moves or stalls are not the ones above you. They are the ones beside you, below you, and in the rooms you have not walked into yet. By the time you need influence you do not have, it is already too late to build it. This keynote gives leaders the tools to build influence in every direction, before they need it.

Leaders leave able to:

- Show up, speak up, and step up to build trust before it is needed.
- Audit the fifteen relationships that decide the next two years: five that are costing them, five that are carrying them, five that will change everything.
- Build influence up, down, and across before the next initiative depends on it.

For: Senior leaders, project managers, aspiring executives, and anyone who leads with or without direct authority.

3 Crimes Against Productivity THE HEART OF LEADERSHIP

Busy and productive cost the same. Only one pays you back.

Your people are working harder than ever, and the work that matters keeps getting pushed to tomorrow. Their calendars are full, the task list is growing, and the output that moves the mission keeps sliding. This keynote exposes what is stealing the capacity and installs the rhythm that gets it back.

Teams leave able to:

- Separate the work that moves the mission from busy work. Identify what the gap is costing in dollars.
- Protect the highest value hours so the work that drives revenue, results, and growth receives peoples best.
- Close the open loops that quietly drain capacity all week: unfinished work, undecided decisions, and tasks that should be eliminated.

For: Senior leaders, operations teams, project managers, and any organization paying full salaries for partial output.

4 Influence Under Fire THE ART OF LEADERSHIP

Bad news does not get better with time. It gets more expensive.

The conversation you are avoiding is the one the mission is waiting for. The person best positioned to have it is finding a workaround, and the tension is migrating into the project timeline, budget, and retention numbers. This keynote gives leaders the tools to move through conflict instead of around it.

Leaders leave able to:

- Read what is actually driving the tension and address the real issue instead of managing the surface symptoms.
- Name their own default reactions under pressure so they walk into the hardest conversation with a plan instead of a reaction.
- Move decisions forward in days instead of quarters, without damaging the relationships the next initiative depends on.

For: Leadership teams, cross functional teams, project managers, and any organization where stalled decisions are costing more than the hard conversation would.
